

Prof. Elżbieta Cipora/ Jan Grodek State University, Sanok, Poland

Elżbieta Cipora – Polish nurse and epidemiologist, habilitated doctor of medical and health sciences, university professor at the Jan Grodek State University in Sanok.

She studied at the Faculty of Nursing and Health Sciences of the Medical University of prof. Feliks Skubiszewski in Lublin, where she obtained a master's degree in medical teaching in the field of nursing. She received her doctorate in 2008 at the Medical Academy in Gdańsk on the basis of the dissertation entitled Epidemiological analysis of the causes of hospitalization of patients in the Department of Surgery in Sanok and the types of health needs of the poviast population. She obtained the degree of doctor habilitated in medical and health sciences at the Medical University of Warsaw based on a series of thematically related scientific publications entitled Epidemiology, prevention and selected conditions of life of women diagnosed with breast cancer.

At the beginning of her professional career, she worked as a nurse in Brzozów and Sanok hospitals. Then as a teacher at the Medical Post-Secondary School, and since 2003 at the State University of Jan Grodek in Sanok. At the University, she was the director of the Medical Institute, later the vice-rector for didactics, in the years 2012-2020 she was the rector, and currently she is the vice-rector of the University.

The main area of research interests of prof. Elżbieta Cipora, there are issues related to public health and oncology. Author of numerous articles, chapters in monographs, editor or co-editor of collective works, participant of numerous national and international conferences. She has participated many times in European and other international programs. In addition, he is a member of international and national organizations and scientific societies, he reviews publications in renowned scientific journals.